How Much is a Junk Car Worth?

To determine how much is my junk car worth, you need to contact someone who buys junk cars in order to get an estimate. These estimates will vary based on the following:

- The location of the car,
- the condition of the junk car,
- the make and model of the vehicle,
- and the current price of scrap metal.

A junk car appraiser will look at all of these factors and then estimate the value of your vehicle. This determines what they will pay you for your junk car.

Value of Scrap Metal

Most cars are made up of nearly 55 percent steel, at around 2,400 pounds, and about 300 pounds of aluminum. When you sell your junk car to a junk car buyer, they are really buying the value of your car's scrap metal by the ton. Any metals in your car, such as steel, aluminum, or copper can then be sold by them to scrap metal dealers. Because the price for scrap metal can change regularly and can vary by region, the value of your car will also change.

Car Parts

The year, make, and model also affect the price you will get for your junk car. It often depends on the demand for parts, which is not always consistent. Models change from year to year, so this can affect demand.

Condition of Your Car

And of course, the condition of the vehicle is important, too, when it comes to the value of your junk car. If the car runs well you will, of course, get more money for it, but most people are not junking cars that run smoothly. A car that does not run and is truly a junk car will be sold for scrap metal rather than for its parts.

While these are not the only factors that determine your junk car's value. And depending upon your vehicle, you may get more money for your junk car.
