Like many dreamers, I had a vision of what my 1966 Ford Mustang would look like when I finally "had enough money" to fix it up. A couple of weeks ago I realized that, a. life is getting more and more expensive with my little family and b. I wasn't making that much more money. I decided to be realistic and let the old Mustang go. A guy who lived about an hour away bought the car but had a couple of problems to deal with. The car did not run and the tires were missing or flat. Dealing with this junk car removal would have been very difficult for him had I not had a tow truck in which I was able to lend him a hand. Moving a running car with actual air pressure in the tires is one thing, effectively performing a junk car removal and relocation is a totally different story. LUCKY YOU!! We handle all that for you!!

Broken down vehicles are not easy to move at all. They are heavy, heavy, heavy. Not to mention that their sheer weight seems to be compounded by the fact that there is hardly ever any air in the tires because the car or truck has been sitting for two years. Have you ever tried to PUSH a Chevy Silverado onto a car dolly with flat tires? Good luck!
